

In the last calendar year, Standard Life came to the UAE and started to market some products, predominantly Savings Plans. Because they didn't have a proper license to operate here, they have had to pull out of the market and refund all premiums.

The point is if you bought one of their plans, at least you got your money back but surely you should be looking to change the Adviser who recommended them? It seems poor judgement and research to have recommended an Insurance Company that should not have been marketing here in the first place.

What else has your Adviser got wrong? For experienced and professional advice, please contact me sooner rather than later to get an expert managing your financial future, not a "product flogger".....over to you!
